

1

Peer evals

From the instructions: "This is an opportunity to provide feedback on how your learning experience has benefited from the contributions of your classmates. Below consider which students have contributed the most to what you have learned during class discussions, by discussing and applying concepts, offering insights and personal examples, and/or in other ways…

Circle up to 16 students."

2

Course Admin

Today

- Peer Evals
- Check-in re Class 11
- Capstone: AOC / Dubinsky / Pope / Lincoln
- Wrap-up (via habits)

"Make It Your Own" Projects

- Due EOD next Thursday (December 11)

3

(Re MIYO projects) You are now here

4

A big thanks to a great TA team

Caneel VonNostrand

Fei Zou

Alec Escamilla

5

Lingering questions from Class 11?

Breakout Groups

Discuss:

- What can you build into your regular routine that will help you avoid status traps?

But how specifically?

Short-term vs. Long-term

Fundamental human nature suggest long-term could be a problem:

Redirect
- Attention
  - We pay more attention to those higher status than us, as they have more control over our resources
    - Tip: Google "What's That Name? Norman the Doorman – SNL"

Fight
- Adaptation
  - We adapt to current environment as the status quo, which sets our expectations, regardless of privilege

Ensure
- Feedback
  - Fewer people are willing to disagree with us, or provide honest feedback, as we have accumulate power.

25

Influence – Massey – 2025 37 Class 11 – Status

6

"AOC on Power"

Reactions to this reading?
Favorite bits?

7

Donna Dubinsky & Apple Computer

8

What happened? Should have happened?

Sept 1984: Jobs critique, JIT proposal

Sept-Dec 1984: Before the strategy review

Spring 1985: Pajaro Dunes off-site meeting

9

Group Breakouts

Assume Donna is going to give the ultimatum, and she asks for your advice on how to give it most effectively. What do you tell her?

10

Dubinsky Epilogue

11

Lessons from Dubinsky

Defensiveness never serves you

- Undermines credibility, impedes learning

12

How to Criticize (w/o being defensive)

Anatol Rapoport (game theorist, "tit-for-tat" originator):

- You should attempt to re-express your target's position so clearly, vividly, and fairly that your target says, "Thanks, I wish I'd thought of putting it that way.
- You should list any points of agreement (especially if they are not matters of general or widespread agreement).
- You should mention anything you have learned from your target.

Only then are you permitted a word of rebuttal or criticism.

- via philosopher Daniel Dennett, 2014.

13

Lessons from Dubinsky

Defensiveness never serves you

- Undermines credibility, impedes learning

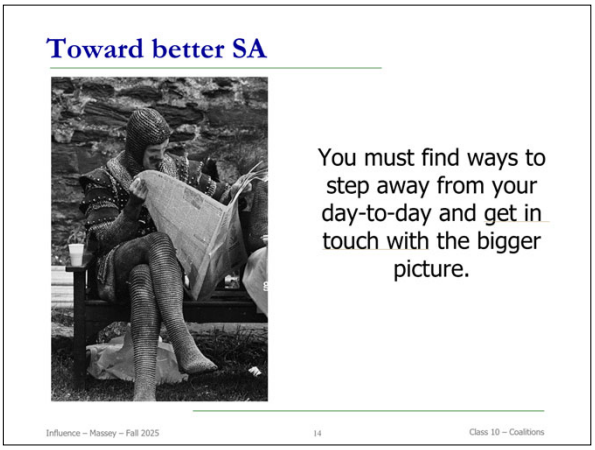

Dubinsky initially showed poor Situation Awareness

- Dangerous to be so distracted by the day-to-day that you lose the big picture, important changes

14

Situation Awareness

Class 10

15

Lessons from Dubinsky

Defensiveness never serves you

- Undermines credibility, impedes learning

Dubinsky initially showed poor Situation Awareness

- Dangerous to be so distracted by the day-to-day that you lose the big picture, important changes

Build coalitions

- They are the key resource for the otherwise weak

16

As we said re coalitions

Class 10

Rx #3: Have the meeting before the meeting

Negotiations are always influenced, often constrained, and sometimes even settled, long before the official talks begin.

Use advance meetings for:

- Intelligence gathering
- "Temperature taking"
- Credibility building
- Groundwork laying
- In sum: Alliance creating

Influence – Massey – Fall 2021 Class 7 – Coalitions

17

Lessons from Dubinsky

Defensiveness never serves you

- Undermines credibility, impedes learning

Dubinsky initially showed poor Situation Awareness

- Dangerous to be so distracted by the day-to-day that you lose the big picture, important changes

Build coalitions

- They are the key resource for the otherwise weak

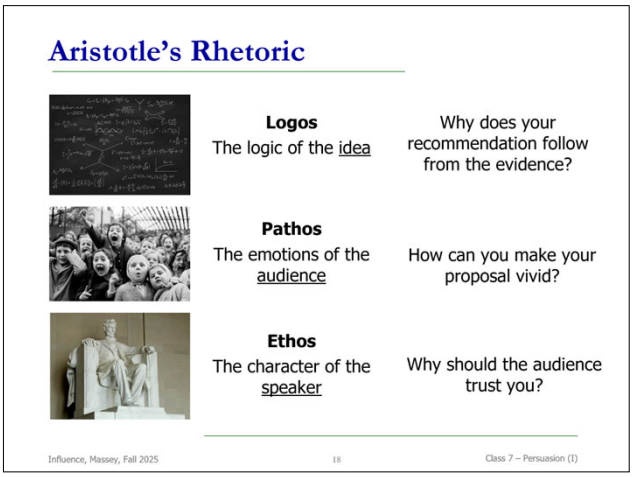

Remember all 3 elements of persuasion

- Need to move beyond what merely comes natural to you.

18

Dubinsky neglected Logos

Class 7

19

Lessons from Dubinsky

Defensiveness never serves you

- Undermines credibility, impedes learning

Dubinsky initially showed poor Situation Awareness

- Dangerous to be so distracted by the day-to-day that you lose the big picture, important changes

Build coalitions

- They are the key resource for the otherwise weak

Remember all 3 elements of persuasion

- Need to move beyond what merely comes natural to you.

There is a time and place for might.

- Far more compelling in service of organizational interests than individual interests.

20

Might can be nuanced

How you're probably thinking about might:

How you need to be thinking about it:

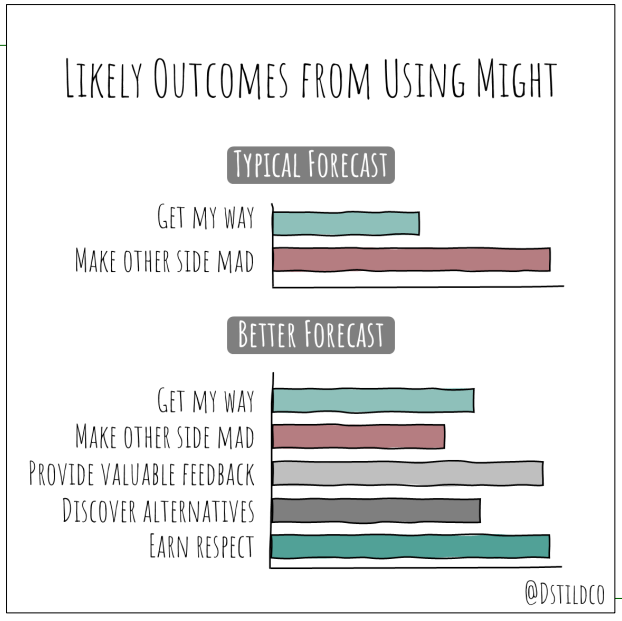

21

Likely Outcomes from Using Might 22

Lessons from Dubinsky

Defensiveness never serves you
- Undermines credibility, impedes learning

Dubinsky initially showed poor Situation Awareness
- Dangerous to be so distracted by the day-to-day that you lose the big picture, important changes

Build coalitions
- They are the key resource for the otherwise weak

Remember all 3 elements of persuasion
- Need to move beyond what merely comes natural to you.

There is a time and place for might.
- Far more compelling in service of organizational interests than individual interests.

As always, performance reputation is the foundation.
- But naïve to believe it is sufficient.

23

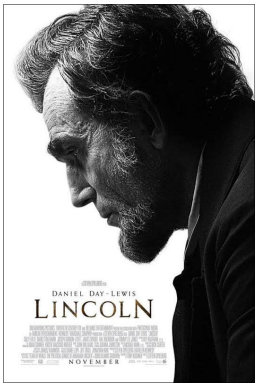

The New York Times

Pope With the Humble Touch Is Firm in Reshaping the Vatican

By JASON HOROWITZ and JIM YARDLEY JAN. 13, 2014

24

Based on Team of Rivals.

Nearing the end of the Civil War, January 1865.

President Lincoln strategizes how to pass the 13th amendment banning slavery.

25

26

What stood out to you?

27

More of Lincoln's SA

"We're stepped out upon the world stage now. Now! With the fate of human dignity in our hands. Blood's been spilt to afford us this moment. Now! Now! Now!…See what is before you. See the hear and now, that's the hardest thing, the only that accounts."

28

In the final days before the vote…

"I am President of the United States, clothed with great power. The abolition of slavery by constitutional provisions settles the fate, for all coming time, not only the millions now in bondage, but of unborn millions to come – a measure of such importance that those two votes must be procured. I leave it to you to determine how it shall be done: but remember that I am President of the United States, clothed with immense power, and I expect you to procure those votes."

29

What did you learn? (8:30, randomly selected)

- Don't expect your work to speak for itself. Leaders like Lincoln and the Pope may have driven major institutional change, but they also understood when to speak out about their efforts and use their influence to move others. Dubinsky should have drawn on additional sources of power (for example, by establishing herself publicly as the distribution expert via a strong presentation highlighting the existing system™s successes) or built referent power by pitching people one-on-one and getting them on her side. (Divya Ravinder)
- Looking at those three next to each other, you can see how all three do or do not deal with factions and opposing ideas. From Lincoln video, I learned how important conviction is. However, from the Dubinsky piece, I learned that conviction alone is not enough, and you also need to be able to form coalitions. From the Pope Francis example, I learned how to form those coalitions and enact real change. (Haley Raphael)
- As I reflect, I feel like sometimes you just need to say what's in your heart / your conviction and use your power to sway an outcome. HOWEVER, I think there is a moment for different ways to do that (i.e., privately like Lincoln vs publicly like Dubinsky and Pope Francis) that need to be considered for the moment and sensitivity of the situation. (Inaya Johnson)
- It's critical to have gathered power and made it known before a big decision point comes up. (Olivia Mork)
- To truly have power, one must have many feathers in his cap. (Duncan Robertson)
- One thing is knowing when to influence people through power and when to influence through person connection. Both Lincoln and Pope Francis used some of their legitimate power when needed but they also used their personalities and emotions to connect. Dubinsky however struggled to convince people because she was focused on the facts and on being right. It was interesting to compare all three examples and see what worked, and didn't. (Luisa Esteves)

30

What did you learn? (10:15, randomly selected)

- Power of networks and coalitions are extremely important for affecting the change we want to make. Acting alone we are much weaker and more easily isolated/ignored. (Ryan Winick)
- Considering these three examples, we see that positions of power allows for utilization of might (when used sparingly and correctly). Lincoln and Pope Francis particularly exerted power using might in important cases, whereas Dubinksy felt the power of might from Jobs/Sculley. These are cases which truly demonstrate how impactful might can be. Lincoln passed the Proclamation Emancipation. Pope Francis ousted other leaders from the church. And Dubinsky felt like she could barely make a dent in Jobs decision to cut distribution centers. (Saawan Patel)
- One thing I learn from looking at Dubinsky, Lincoln, and Pope Francis together is that power and influence don't show up in just one way. Each of them worked in completely different situations, but they all found ways to shift their organizations by leaning into whatever strengths they had. Lincoln used the weight of the presidency and a big-picture view to steady people who were panicking. Pope Francis relied on humility, symbolic gestures, and smart personnel decisions to push change inside a rigid institution. And Dubinsky, even without senior authority, used her conviction, expertise, and willingness to take a risk to influence a huge decision at Apple. Putting them side by side makes it clear that influence isn't about a single tactic. It's about understanding the moment you're in, knowing what kind of power you actually have, and having the courage to use it. (Tom Fawcett)
- How you deliver the message is incredibly important. We see Dubinsky fail to effectively communicate her message. Lincoln physically project his power in his message to get his cabinet in line, and Pope Francis inject key symbolism as he transformed the papacy. (Josh Klein)
- That being a good leader sometimes requires having a repertoire of “personas to use in different circumstances. For example, Pope Francis can be very understanding and open-minded publicly, but much more ruthless when dealing with the clergy. Lincoln can shift from appealing to people™s moral principles to being forceful and hierarchical when needed. Dubinsky, on the other hand, is appreciated for her direct and blunt style but struggles to adapt it, which ultimately doesn™t help her. (Cecilia Zanna)

31

What did you learn? (1:45, randomly selected)

- It's important to recognise that some issues cannot be solved by arguing the technicals. It requires a reframe from the logical arguments into a problem of creating compelling narratives and visions and building alliance and coalitions. These are the true building blocks that will allow you to create influence and change. (Calvin Li)
- leadership is powerful when moral conviction is combined with deep logical strategy (Joey Epstein)
- Surrounding yourself with individuals who are strongly in your court and can help get your opinion out is crucial to fostering influence. Without diverse allies who have a voice in separate parts of your organization (or government), it is difficult to wield legitimate power - other sources of power that can be created by others on your "side" are essential. (Abby Wax)
- I think about how true power is cultivated by embodying contradictory characteristics, sometimes all at once. You can be kind and warm, establishing an fantastic environment, but also need to be tough and harsh, making tough decisions that impact lives. This is more Pope and Lincoln focused, but the way they seemed to do both at once was a separation between public and private persona - being much warmer with their constituents and harsher with their private lieutenants. Another commonality between the 3 is focusing on a singular, massive goal, and risking everything to achieve it. They need to use all the tools they possess and sacrifice smaller goals, maybe even at the expense of some of their values…(Sarah Gurbach)
- Effective influence requires matching tactics to the situation. Dubinsky had strong convictions but struggled to adapt her tactics to the organizational politics around her. Lincoln achieved a morally urgent goal by combining principled commitment with pragmatic deal-making. Pope Francis advances institutional change through symbolic actions that resonate culturally and spiritually. (Chengye Jiang)

32

Ambition without realism is feckless

Lincoln, with one of the most just causes in the history of government on his side, still needed influence tactics to accomplish his goal.

Being right is not enough. Being moral is not enough. Working hard is not enough. Formal authority is often not enough. To achieve great things you will need influence tools. A full complement of them.

Course Wrap-up

On habits…

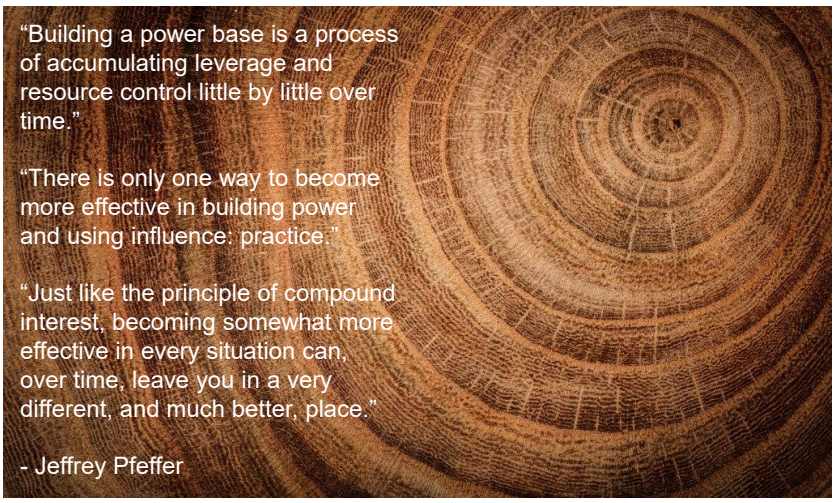

On personal change

It's hard!

Intentional, lasting personal change is more the exception than the norm.

35

Remember: It's a process

36

Big drivers for continued personal growth

Notes/takeaways
- Distilled and/or annotated and/or excerpted and/or organized and/or visualized. And accessible!

Reminders

Flesh-and-blood examples/models

New info
- E.g., books, podcasts

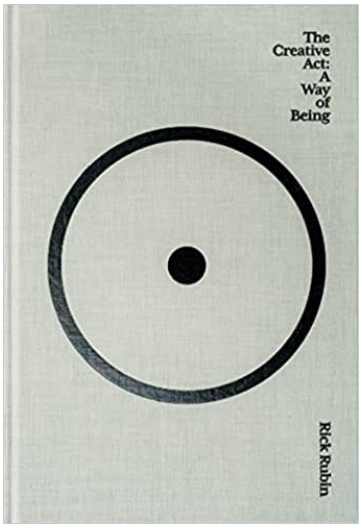

Opportunities to talk about it
- Even better: commitments to talk

Fellow travelers

Habits/routines
- Behavior is more about habits than intentions

37

Rick Rubin on Habits

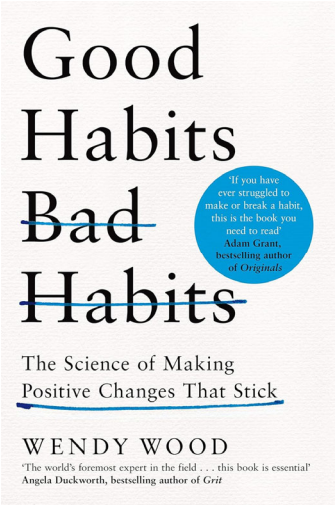

"We all yearn to establish new healthy, productive habits, such as exercising, eating more local, natural foods, or practicing our craft more regularly.

"But how often do we consider examining and removing the habits that currently drive our days? How often do we regard behaviors accepted as "the way people are" or "the way we are" merely as habits?

"Each of us has automatic habits. We have habits in movement. Habits in speech, thought, and perception. Habits in being ourselves. Some of them have been practiced every day since we were children. A pathway gets carved into the brain and becomes difficult to change. Most of these habits control us, beyond our decisions, to the point they function autonomously and automatically, like the regulation of our body temperature."

38

THE leading psychologist of habits

Across ages, genders, cultural, and personality, we all use habits about 43% (!) of the time in our lives.

- More for people working full-time.
- Less for those who live with others, especially children.

"All of us can make better use of our 43 percent. We can sync up the deep and workmanlike pull of habit with our conscious intentions and long-term goals."

39

What do you want to do differently?

What is a routine or habit you want to cut out of your life?

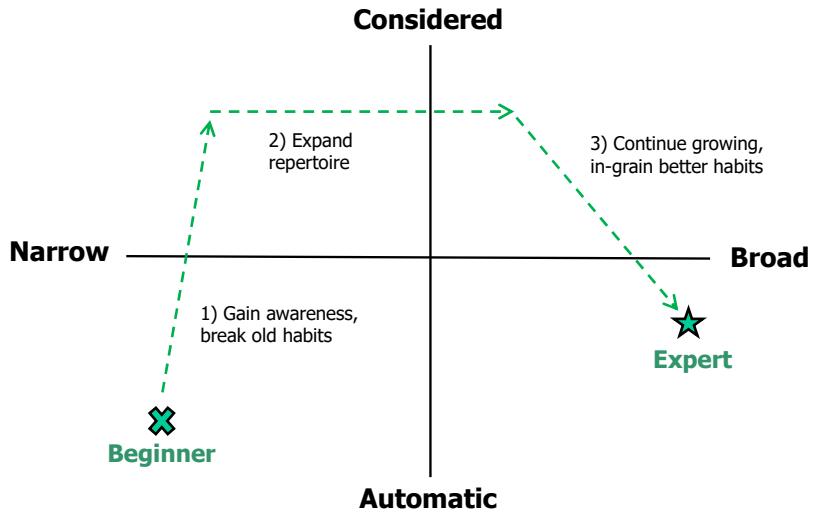

- It may be keeping you on some wrong track
- It might be feeding you unhelpful information
- It might be consuming precious capacity

What is a routine or process you want to add to your life?

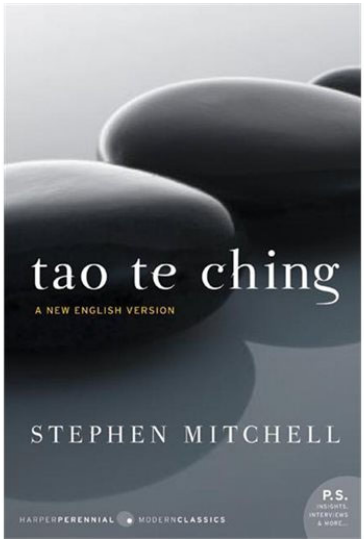

- To get "accretion" working in your favor
- How can you embed this routine in your life – socially, physically, etc.?

40

The Evolution of Influence Habits

41

Knowing others is intelligence;
knowing yourself is true wisdom.
Mastering others is strength;
mastering yourself is true power.

- Chapter 33

42